One of the Many Queer Incidents

TOOK SHOTS FOR A SALUTE

Solid Shot of the Charleston With Blank Cartridges.

One of the strangest incidents of the war with Sonin was the taking of the Island of Guam, of the Ladrones group, by the first expedition to the Philippines A correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing on board the transport Australia, under date of June 22, says: "Early on Monday morning, the 22th in-tant, the fleet rounded the northern exemity of Guam Island and headed southard towards the harbor, the Charleston blowing, and frequent tropical downpours bscured the landscape and made observation difficult. The chief town, Agana, containing the residence of the governor and the garrison, lies on the north side of a coral peninsula, jutting far out into ocean. The Charleston worked slowin toward the town as far as she dared to go because of corni shoals, and when atisfied that the two Spanish gunboats which are supposed to be somewhere among these outlying islands and which were one of the chief objects of her quest, were not there, she turned her prow seaward ugain and rounded the end of the coral spit, and, passing through a narrow channel between the reef and a high bluff of volcanic busult, slowly pushed her way chief harbor of the island, and whose landing place, Unapa, is about four miles across the peninsula from Agana. The three transports lay to off the entrance eyond the reach of cannon sho, their up. per decks and rigging black with the crowds of soldlers cager to see the expect-vessel, which, under the glass, proved to be a small whaling brig flying the Japafirst seen created considerable excitement, being mistaken for one of the Spanish gunboats. Near the shore, on the opposite side of the bay, which is here about two miles wide, was seen a low fort, apparently built of stone and faced embankment around it. When she was within about two miles of the fert, the Charleston opened upon it with her threepounders, firing thirteen shots in rapid If you want credit the price is not a peiny higher.

Making lining and faying carpets without extra charge is something that no other house will do for you, and we tack the matting down free.

By Ounders, firing thirteen shots in rapid succession, four of which were seen to strike the fort. Cheer after cheer went up from the transports as these shots free. seen the excitement died down, and was followed by a long wait to learn what the teal situation was. It proved in some respects to be an amusing one. The Charleston had ceased firing because the fort made no reply. Its shots had only been fired for the purpose of unmasking the enemy, and as none was unmasked, she walled for further developments.

"It was afterwards learned that the fort was an old structure, built ninety years ago of coral, and never had a cannon mounted in it, and had not been occupied for half a century, having been originally constructed as a defense against the natives and not for the protection of the harbor against warships. Don Quixote's famous charge on the windmills had been eclipsed by the American navy. American navy.

Soon, however, there were developments. Some time before the Charleston entered the horbor, the fleet had been observed from the landing at Unapa and the the purpose of going aboard in his ca-pacity as quarantine official. In addition to this, an old brass cannon had been loaded for the purpose of returning the expected salute. The port officer was about half way out to the ship when the firing began, and did not notice that solid shot were being fired. This intelligence, however, was speedily conveyed to the men in charge of the shore canonsequently made painfully aware that cannon balls were salling in his direction. He rode post haste to the landing and asked them what they were going to do with the cannon, and was told they were about to answer the salute. Whereupon remarked it was a queer salute that was accompanied by solid shot.

This put a new phase on the matter the Spanish officials, and immediately the governor's adjutant embarked in oat, and hastened after the health offi-Tharleston to inquire the meaning of uch unfriendly conduct. The health offiwas the first to arrive on board. When climbed over the side, he was escorted Capt. Glass's stateroom, and learned or the first time that the vessel he had houghts of quarantining was a warship of the American navy intent upon capturor the Island. A few minutes later the indignant adjutant climbed over the side and received the same information. He was further told to return immediately to the shore and bring the governor on board. Meanwhile, the transports were signaled to follow the Charleston into the harbor, which they quickly did, the ves-sels being anchored within a few hundred yards of each other.

"At 3 o'clock the adjutant returned on board with a message from the governor, saying that the laws of Spain forbid him to go on board a foreign warship, and that negotiations must be conducted on shore. Capt. Glass then sent Lieut. Braunersreuter, with a very courteous note, stating in effect that war existed the island of Guam; that it was folly for his small force to make resistance, de-manding that he surrender himself, his garrison, and all arms and munitions of war, and giving him until morning to re ply. When morning came, and no reply having been received, Capt. Glass sen the governor word that he would wait only half an hour longer, and at once embarked a landing party in boats for the purpose of taking forcible possession.

"This party consisted of about fifty marines from the Charleston and Companies A and D of the Second Oregon, from the Australia. A strong wind was blowing, and there was a heavy swell in the harbor, making the embarkation a slow and difficult task. The pitching and the tossing of the boats alongside the the lossing of the bowels every fwelve thours, and we were convinced that unless it soon obtained relief it would not live thouse was expressed that a number of the men, notwithstanding that they had been a month on board ship, became seasick.
